FIELD NOTE · How to use this guide

Start with the part of Serrano that will shape daily life: the village, the street, the outdoor setting or the route to Town Center. Then use the questions in this guide to decide which addresses merit a deeper, property-specific conversation.

1 Start with the place, not the list

Serrano is a gated, master-planned residential community in El Dorado Hills. It rewards a more specific search than a broad list of square footage, bedroom count and price. A home can feel materially different depending on village access, lot orientation, nearby open space, privacy, grade, oak canopy, outdoor rooms and the daily route to the places you will use most.

For a buyer coming from elsewhere in Northern California—or from the Bay Area or Southern California—the first objective is not to make an immediate decision. It is to make the next visit more useful. Read the setting, compare a few distinct streets and villages, and ask the questions that put the architecture in its real ownership and lifestyle context.

FIELD NOTE · The Live Serrano approach

Live Serrano is a focused editorial guide. It is not a substitute for current MLS information, HOA documents, inspections, title review, lender advice, insurance guidance, legal advice, engineering or architectural advice. Verify the current facts for the exact home, lot and village you are considering.

1.1 The first visit: a simple sequence

Begin with the setting. Drive the primary approach, then look at the slope, canopy, trail/open-space adjacency and how the home sits on the street.

Compare one contrasting village or home type. A golf-facing view, a wooded interior setting and a contemporary/newer residence can each answer a different lifestyle question.

Spend time at Town Center. A dinner, coffee or short lake-side walk can reveal more about daily rhythm than a rushed drive-by.

Save property-level questions for the right moment. Once an address is a serious candidate, request the current records, approvals and disclosures for that specific home.

2 Choose a home, street and village together

A home search in Serrano works best when the structure, land and village are evaluated as one decision. An impressive kitchen or view may be important, but it should not distract from access, privacy, terrain, maintenance exposure or current community rules.

2.1 Home: the inside-outside relationship

Look at how the main living spaces connect to the patio, pool, landscape and views. Consider the amount of outdoor program you will actually use, the privacy of windows and entertaining zones, mature tree placement, sun exposure and the practical condition of hardscape, drainage, rooflines and systems. For an older or substantially improved home, connect the visual impression to permits, invoices, inspections and the conditions behind the finishes.

2.2 Street: arrival, privacy and everyday movement

A street can shape an address as much as the home itself. Notice grade, curve, neighboring orientation, garage/driveway placement, visitor arrival, parking, lighting, sound and the view corridor from rooms that matter to you. For a hillside or oak-studded property, ask how drainage, retaining, access and landscape stewardship may affect future planning.

2.3 Village: current documents, not assumptions

Serrano villages may have different governing documents and exterior-review paths. Before building, remodeling or relying on a conceptual improvement, obtain the current CC&Rs, architectural guidelines, design-review or architectural-control process, fee schedule, submittal checklist, meeting calendar and approval-expiration rules for the exact property.

Figure 1: Serrano's golf-and-oak landscape is part of the place; club membership is separate from home ownership and subject to current club terms.

3 Outdoor amenities and the everyday map

Serrano's foothill setting gives buyers a broad outdoor frame: oak landscape, open-space views, private outdoor rooms, pools, trails and a nearby private-club context. The key is to distinguish what belongs to the individual property, what is governed by a village or association, and what is offered separately by a private club.

3.1 Outdoor rooms at the property

A pool, spa, sports court, outdoor kitchen, terraces and view deck can be meaningful, but they deserve the same scrutiny as interior systems. Ask about permits, age, maintenance, equipment, drainage, safety features, tree impacts, fencing and whether a future change may require design review or other approval.

3.2 Country Club and neighborhood context

Serrano Country Club is a private club. Membership is separate from home ownership. Verify current categories, availability, access, fees and terms directly with the club. Do not assume a particular home includes membership or a transferable membership benefit unless the current property documentation states it.

3.3 Town Center and practical proximity

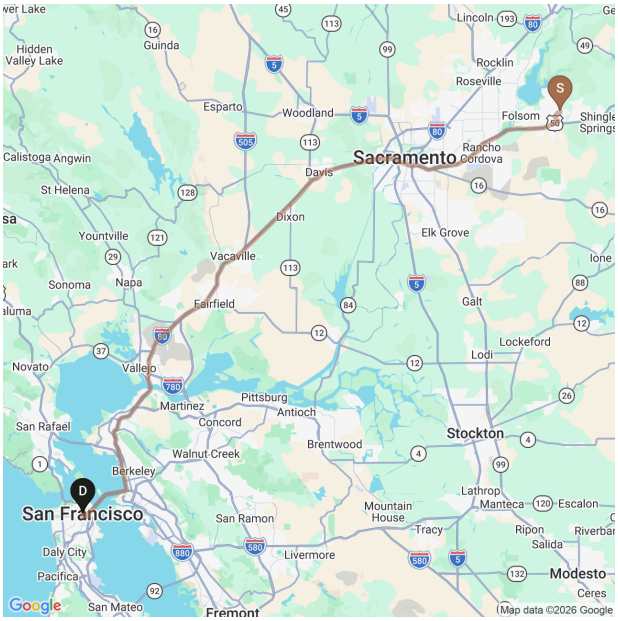
El Dorado Hills Town Center offers dining, cinema, shopping, lake views, hotels and community events. The location details matter: Milestone, South Fork Grille, C. Knight's Steakhouse and Vacanza Romana are listed as Town Center dining tenants; Sienna and ELDO Chophouse are nearby rather than Town Center tenants. Use the official directory and each restaurant's official site for current details.

FIELD NOTE · Questions to put in writing

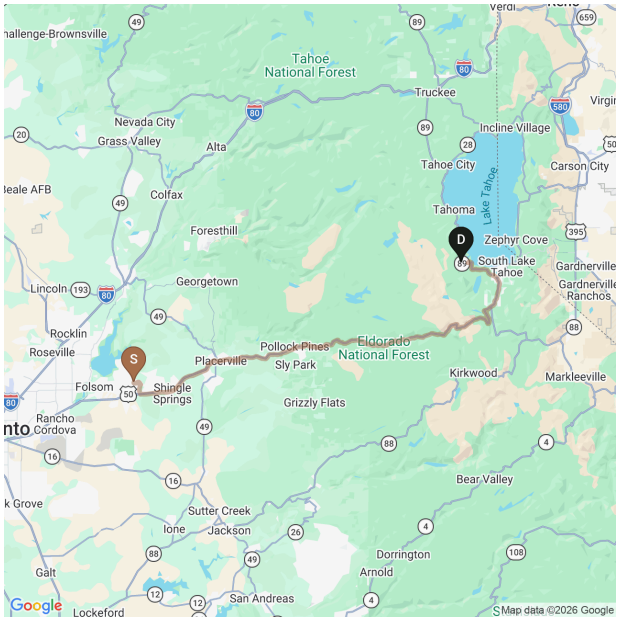
Which amenities are included with the home? Which are privately maintained? Which exterior changes require review? What documents describe the current condition, approvals, maintenance and future obligations for this exact property?

4 Bay Area and Tahoe: regional context without a commute promise

Serrano is rooted in El Dorado Hills, but the broader Northern California map remains useful to many relocation buyers. The value is optionality: an urban Bay Area connection to the west and Sierra/Lake Tahoe recreation to the east. Roads, departure points, weather, seasonal conditions and traffic determine the actual trip; use a current route before making a travel plan.



San Francisco orientation. Live Serrano maps a road distance of approximately 115 miles from Serrano Country Club to San Francisco. This is geographic context, not a commute estimate.



Emerald Bay orientation. Live Serrano maps approximately 81 road miles from Serrano Country Club to Emerald Bay State Park. Check winter travel, parking and park advisories before heading east.

5 New construction: evaluate the path before the palette

A custom or new-construction opportunity can be compelling, but it is a sequence of interdependent decisions: lot feasibility, design, design review, engineering, permits, utilities, financing, procurement, construction and closeout. Do not rely on a finish board or a broad timeline alone.

5.1 The lot diligence file

Request the recorded lot documents, survey/topography, easements, setbacks, grading/drainage information, utility/service availability, fire-access requirements and any known off-site work. Ask which professionals should review the scope before a conceptual plan becomes an expectation.

5.2 The village and design-review file

Identify whether the exact property is reviewed by a Design Review Committee or Architectural Control Committee. Obtain the current CC&Rs, architectural guidelines, fee schedule, submittal calendar, approval duration and rules for materials, colors, landscaping, trees, pools, solar, retaining walls and other exterior work.

5.3 The build agreement file

Compare written scope, allowances, exclusions, change-order rules, warranty, insurance, schedule, procurement, subcontractor responsibility, contingency handling and closeout process. Independently verify licensing, references, completed local work, insurance and compatibility with the specific lot.

Tamasi Ross Construction's public portfolio includes a project it identifies as 5010 Greyson Creek / Napa Luxury in Serrano Golf and Country Club. Its other named portfolio projects should be treated as design references unless their setting and status are separately confirmed. The company's official materials say new-construction pre-sales average nine months to one year from permit issuance depending on weather and complexity; that is builder-provided context, not a promise for a future project.

6 A better offer and due-diligence process

The right home is rarely the one with the loudest first impression. It is the property whose setting, condition, current ownership context and long-term fit are understood well enough to make a confident next decision.

6.1 Before making an offer

- Reconfirm the current listing status, price, inclusions and showing requirements.
- Review disclosures, inspection opportunities, permits and improvements with the appropriate professionals.
- Verify current HOA/association information, special assessments or Mello-Roos context, insurance considerations, club terms and school/attendance information for the exact address.
- Compare recent closed and current competing properties with attention to condition, lot, setting, time on market and concessions—not only a broad price-per-square-foot shortcut.
- Use written contingencies, timelines and financing decisions that match the specific transaction and the guidance of your licensed advisors.

6.2 When selling a Serrano home

The same framework applies in reverse. Buyers will evaluate setting, lot, village, condition, amenities, outdoor living and the evidence behind major improvements. A thoughtful listing strategy makes the property story legible, supports the important facts and lets the right buyer understand how the address fits their life.

7 First-visit checklist

Setting

- What does the home face?
- How does the grade affect privacy, drainage and outdoor use?
- What is beside, behind and across from the property?
- How does the address feel at different times of day?

Daily life

- Which Town Center routes, outdoor settings and regional destinations matter to you?
- Does the home's plan support the way you host, work, park and spend time outside?
- Are the maintenance and improvement responsibilities a fit?

Ownership

- Which documents govern this exact home and village?
- What exterior work has been approved or completed?
- What should be independently verified about fees, assessments, insurance and club membership?
- Which items require specialist review?

Next step

- Which current documents or disclosures would make the decision clearer?
- Which comparable properties should be studied?
- What is the best way to see the home again with the right questions in hand?
